PARIS GREEN PUT IN SPRING

Charles Toms Blamed for Placing Deadly Poison in Spring of Woman he Thought was his Enemy. No Serious Results.

Charles Toms, brother of John Toms, alias John Lee, who escaped from the Adams County jail some months ago and has never since been captured, is in the Frederick jail charged with putting Paris green in the spring of Mrs. Bessie Patterson, of Catocin District, whom he considered his enemy.

The accused is already under bail for his appearance before the next grand jury charged with mutilating a cow belonging to Mrs. Patterson's mother. Revenge for the first arrest is alleged to be the motive for placing the poison in the water.

It is stated that the Patterson family, consisting of the mother and three small children, were in terror of bodily harm at the hands of Toms. Mrs. Patterson and her children live in a small house with her mother, Mrs. Mary Draper, on the road leading from Hamburg to Foxville. The house is in a remote section in the Catocin Mountain, about 18 miles from Frederick, chiefly inhabited by berry pickers. Recently a large portion of that section of the mountain was burned over by a forest fire.

Deputy Sheriff Hauser, who visited the spring, found the water badly polluted. The sides which were walled up, and the bottom were coated with a greenish substance which was also on the surface of the water.

"It was Paris green," said Mr. Hauser, "and enough had been put in the water to kill anyone using it."

The spring is about 3 feet square and 2 feet deep and has long supplied the drinking water for the family.

Some days ago Toms, it is alleged, was caught in the act of cutting with a knife a cow belonging to Mrs. Draper. This was reported to Sheriff Grimes and the accused man was arrested and held in jail for the Frederick county grand jury. According to Mrs. Patterson, she has since been afraid to go any distance from home because of threats made by Toms. When she went to the spring for water a few mornings ago she discovered that it had been polluted and found dead fish lying on the bottom. Upon further investigation she discovered the poison to be Paris green and at once notified Deputy Sheriff Hauser.

Gettysburg Base Ball Team Gets Revenge on Hanoverians by Defeating them in Interesting Contest on Nixon Field.

Hertzler twirled for Gettysburg in fine style allowing only three hits and striking out ten opposing batsmen. Lawrence for Hanover was effective and struck out eight, giving only three hits also. Hertzler walked four while Lawrence gave no passes. Errors on both sides were numerous.

Gettysburg opened the scoring in the second when Hertzler got to first on a hit. Oylar ran for him and was sacrificed to second by McAllister. He came home while Berry and Eline were throwing the ball away. Hanover tied the score in the third when Berry got to first on an error, stole second and third and scored on an error by Oylar.

Hanover scored another in the sixth when Reusner got a base on balls, stole second and scored on Swisher's error. The eighth and ninth were noisy ones for Gettysburg. Hertzler got to first on an error by Berry. McDonnell ran for him and stole second and third scoring on a pretty hit along the first base line by Hartzell, who reached first in the mix up that followed. In the ninth Swisher got to first when Hanover's second baseman and right fielder collided in an attempt to get his fly. Skelly sacrificed him to second and he scored on Joe Stock's clean hit to right.

Features of the game were the fielding by Stock and McAllister.

FIRST AT GETTYSBURG

A Washington dispatch under date of July 20 says:

Senator Dixon of Montana, Republican, and Senator Martin, of Virginia, Democrat, brought their Civil War histories and encyclopedias to the Senate today to settle the question whether Virginia or North Carolina troops figured the more prominently in Pickett's charge at Gettysburg.

Senator Dixon was born in North Carolina and asserted in the Senate Tuesday that the histories were all wrong about the charge of Pickett's "Virginians"; that there were really more North Carolinians in the famous charge.

Today Senator Martin cited history to show that Pickett's troops were Virginians; and Senator Dixon replied with citations to show that they were backed up by 15 North Carolina regiments. Senator Dixon said North Carolina had been "first at Bethel, last at Appomattox, and farthest at Gettysburg," while Senator Martin thought he could say the same thing of Virginia Confederates. The controversy was finally dropped when the Senate got uneasy over a threatened renewal of Civil War memories.

ALDRICH DENIES LORIMER STORY

Denies on Stand President Aided Illinois Man.

WANTED GOOD REPUBLICAN

Former Senator Declares He Told Hines Lorimer's Candidacy Was "Not Objectionable" to President.
 Washington, July 21.—Former Senator Nelson W. Aldrich, of Rhode Island, told the senate Lorimer committee of the part he and President Taft took in the election of a senator from Illinois in 1909.
 Instead of telling Edward Hines, of Chicago, the storm center in the present Lorimer investigation, that he and the president were anxious to have Lorimer elected, Mr. Aldrich declared that he said Lorimer's candidacy was "not objectionable."
 When attorneys for Lorimer, on cross-examination, tried to show that the former senator might have said "acceptable," Mr. Aldrich emphatically declared that he said "not objectionable," and that he meant that word and nothing more. He added that he knew Hines would use the information given him at Springfield.
 Mr. Aldrich also denied he had told Hines that he considered Lorimer the only man who could be elected. He declared that he did not ask Senator Penrose to bring Hines to consult with him in regard to the Illinois election, and added that he did not believe Senator Penrose brought Hines to his room.

According to Aldrich, all the conversations he had with Hines in regard to the senatorial situation were regarding the president's attitude toward candidates, first Hopkins, then Boutell, and finally Lorimer. The senator denied that he told Hines he wanted a senator elected because of the prospective close vote on the tariff.
 Hines had testified that Aldrich sent for him about May 1, 1909, to ask about the possibility of the Illinois legislature electing a senator; that eventually, after repeated conferences, Aldrich had asked him to urge Lorimer to become a senatorial candidate, and that after a night conference at the White House, Mr. Aldrich had returned to his home, where Hines was waiting, and told Hines to inform Governor Deneen that the administration was anxious to have the senate vacancy filled, and believed Lorimer could be elected.
 Mr. Aldrich said he had three or four conversations with Hines about the Illinois election, but could not recall on whose initiative they occurred.
 "Mr. Hines," continued Mr. Aldrich, "said at the first conversation that in his judgment Hopkins could not be elected, and he asked me what the attitude of the president was. I said the president was desirous of the election of a Republican, and, while naturally he was friendly to Hopkins because of the primary result, and perhaps other reasons, still he did not intend to take any active part in trying to influence the election of Hopkins or any other candidate."
 Mr. Aldrich testified that their next talk on the Illinois situation occurred when Hines came to him with the statement that there seemed to be a possibility of agreeing on Henry S. Boutell, then representative in congress, for senator. Hines said he was anxious to know what the president's attitude was toward Boutell's candidacy. Mr. Hines, according to Mr. Aldrich, said he was desirous that the man elected would be agreeable to the president.
 "Later," continued Mr. Aldrich, "I reported to Mr. Hines that the president would be agreeable; that he was only anxious to have a Republican elected and that he was satisfied with Boutell's Republicanism."
 The next conversation, Mr. Aldrich said, was about May 20. "Mr. Hines then told me," said Mr. Aldrich, "that it was impossible to agree on Boutell and that he believed there was a possibility of agreeing on Lorimer. He was anxious to know the attitude of the president toward Mr. Lorimer. I told him I would give him an answer later. Later in the day I told him Mr. Lorimer's candidacy would not be objectionable to the president."
 The only one for whom Mr. Aldrich expressed to Hines a preference for senator, he said, was Lowden. Mr. Aldrich said he never had any knowledge of Lorimer's attitude on the tariff. He said he considered Lorimer a good Republican.
 "What is your idea of a good Republican?" inquired Senator Kenyon.
 "One who is a loyal supporter of the president and the administration and has the courage to stand up against local interests in so doing."

CAPE HAITIEN FALLS INTO REBELS' HANDS

One of Chief Cities of Haiti Being Pillaged.

Cape Haitien, Haiti, July 21.—This city is at the mercy of the revolutionists and is being pillaged.
 All the generals opposed to the revolution have found refuge in the foreign consulates. The French consul was slightly wounded while offering protection to the local authorities.
 An American yacht anchored off the town offers refuge to American and other foreign women and children pending the arrival of a United States warship. The German consul, as well as the French consul, is giving the local government representatives such protection as is possible.
 The enemy occupied the city Thursday, when the populace practically declared for the revolutionists. Since then the situation has grown steadily more grave.
 The enemy attacked Fort Liberte as President Simon and his troops withdrew. The last of the government's battalions embarked under a shower of lead. The division commanded by General Monplaisir, governor of Port Au Prince, and commander of the federal troops, fought valiantly, but the other forces of the government offered a feeble resistance.

 Reckless Auto Racing Driver Loses Life in Wisconsin.
 Milwaukee, Wis., July 21.—Lewis Strang, of Racine, Wis., automobile racer and aviator, was killed at Blue River, Wis.

Strang was driving a car in the state reliability tour, the machine jumping an embankment. Strang was in charge of the machine carrying the technical committee.
 While going along at good speed the machine encountered a passing team. In endeavoring to get out of the way the car jumped a bank and the famous driver lost his life.
 Three others in the car jumped and escaped practically uninjured. That Strang deliberately was inviting death on the run was the opinion of his associates on the tour when the party left Lacrosse. Since leaving Milwaukee, Monday, Strang is said to have been so reckless that some who had started with him in his car refused to ride with him.

Strang recently was sued for divorce by his wife, and friends declare that he cared little whether he lived or not and took daring chances on the road.

 Companion of Man Found Dead Is Sought by Police.
 Burlington, N. J., July 21.—That Charles Lippincott, the farmer, whose body was found on Sunday in the woods near the shore of Sylvan lake, after he had been missing from his home for a week, was murdered is the belief of the police.
 A blood-stained shirt and battered hat found in the bushes a few yards from the body gave the police their first intimation of foul play. Other evidence has been rapidly brought to light to show that Lippincott was not a heat victim, as at first supposed.
 Efforts are being made to locate a man who was with Lippincott the day he disappeared. This man is said to have been seen hiding in the thick brush around the lake. Lippincott left a wife and two children. His wife believes he was murdered.

VETO BILL IS PASSED BY LORDS

Upper House Votes For Government Measure.

NO FIGHT WAS OFFERED

Measure Limiting Power of the Peers Carries Amendments Which Commons Will Reject.
 London, July 21.—The house of lords passed the third reading of the parliamentary bill, otherwise known as the veto bill, without division after only three hours' debate.
 The revolt of the insurgent peers failed to materialize. All threats of the extremist lords to throw out the bill at this stage and precipitate a crisis proved a bluff. One solitary peer, Baron Stanmore, raised his voice to demand a vote, but found no supporter.
 Lord Morley, for the government, and Lord Lansdowne, leader of the opposition, repeated some familiar arguments for and against the measure. Lord Halsbury, leader of the extremists, threatened a fight if the house of commons rejects the amendments.
 The future of the measure may be predicted with reasonable certainty. Premier Asquith in the commons on Monday will move the rejection of the lords' amendments en bloc. This done, the prime minister will announce that if the lords persist there will be no course open for him but to tender the king certain advice which will insure the passage of the bill.
 It would not be in accordance with constitutional etiquette to specify the nature of the advice, but everyone will understand that this means the creation of Liberal peers.
 The house of lords will meet on Wednesday or Thursday and Lord Lansdowne will move the acceptance of the bill, predicting its repeal as soon as the Unionists return to office. If the extremists rally round Halsbury and vote for the rejection of the bill Lord Lansdowne is expected to summon his followers to vote for it. It is not anticipated that Halsbury will find more than fifty, perhaps not more than a score, to make the last stand, and the greatest constitutional revolution in almost a century will be accomplished.
 Three considerations have impelled the peers to swallow this bitter medicine—a desire to save their own caste from cheapening, to shield the king from an embarrassing position and to prevent the immediate enactment of extreme radical measures, such as home rule and the disestablishment of the Welsh church. What ultimate effect of the humiliation will be on the Unionist party lies in the future. That farseeing leadership might have prevented it none denies. Who will be the final scapegoat is the question.

The scene in the ancient chamber was more funeral than belligerent. Many peeresses and diplomats sat in the galleries, but there was nothing of a festive spirit which welcomes a great debate. The only dramatic touch was furnished by Lord Halsbury, whose voice, despite his eighty-six years, rang with passion and indignation as he denounced the passing of the old regime.
 Other speakers were diplomatic rather than oratorical. Lord Morley suavely hoped that this parliamentary operation would be accomplished without further social shock. Lord Lansdowne replied with equal suavity that the Unionists must oppose the bill as proposed so long as they were free agents. Every one interpreted this to mean that they would not consider themselves free agents when the threats of doubling the peerage was definitely held over their heads.

The SKY PIRATE

by GARRETT P. SERVISS.

COPYRIGHT BY FRANK A. MURPHY COMPANY.

PROLOGUE.

The sea pirate has long been a fascinating figure of romance, but the march of progress has driven him into well deserved retirement, and he has now been replaced, in fiction at least, by the sky pirate, who is even more mysterious, more daring and more romantic than his predecessor. Read and there will unfold before you the extraordinary story of Captain Alfonso Payton and his airship, the Chameleon; of William Grayman, the richest man in the world; of his beautiful daughter, for whose ransom $10,000,000 was demanded; of Lieutenant Allen of the revenue service, of wonders by wireless and of fierce battles above the clouds.

CHAPTER I.

AN AMAZING ABDUCTION.

THE extraordinary outbreak of piracy which followed with such astonishing promptness the general adoption of aerial navigation in the fourth decade of the twentieth century will no doubt be regarded by future historians as one of the greatest curiosities of human annals. It has already been the subject of much laborious research and of many learned disquisitions, while the public has eagerly devoured the "lives" of a dozen of those astounding marauders of the atmosphere, who descended from the sky with the speed and ferocity of famished eagles. Whole towns were sometimes laid under contribution, the terror inspired by dropping bombs banishing all thought of effective resistance.

Of all the desperate adventures of that period none was so fascinating in personality or had the romantic charm that characterized Captain Alfonso Payton, a Spanish American, whose real Christian name was probably that which he gave, but who had dropped the name of his family, which was said to be one of the oldest and proudest in Spain, dating back to the days of the conquistadores. Payton's exploits in his famous aero Chameleon commanded a great deal of attention at times in the newspapers, but his story has never been fully told, and the closing details, the most amazing of all, were withheld from public knowledge for reasons which will be apparent in what I am about to relate.

Payton, or "Captain Alfonso," as his reckless crew always called him, was one of the handsomest men that I have ever seen. He had a Spaniard's eyes and complexion, with the stature and vigor of a modern American, while his manners were those of an ideal prince. The charm of his personality was felt by everybody who came in contact with him. He was exceedingly well educated, especially in everything which makes a man attractive to women, and if he had chosen to lead an honest life he could unquestionably have married almost any heiress or any beautiful girl that he might have fancied, and he would have been an ornament to society.

But he was a born pirate. Brave and fearless, he was absolutely reckless of the opinions of mankind, rejoiced in his wickedness, sought only the gratification of his whims and pleasures, and yet he could commit an outrage on the liberty and personal rights of others with such winning gentleness, such delicate consideration for their feelings, that often the sting was not at the moment perceived.

Payton's methods were peculiar. He had chosen his line, and he stuck to it until the end. He never attacked treasure laden liners, such as the early transatlantic liners of the International Aero express, which constituted the favorite prey of Morton, the other great pirate of the period, but he made an exclusive specialty of kidnapping, and almost invariably he kidnapped women, whom he treated with the utmost delicacy and consideration consistent with sure capture and safe keeping. There were many instances familiar to newspaper readers of his magic personality so working upon his victims that he won their respect and even friendship.

Nevertheless he was without mercy in his exactions. The object of all his abductions was ransom. No tears, no entreaties, no consideration whatever, had the slightest effect upon him. Pay or stay was his word.

The exploit which finally brought Payton's career to an end was the most extraordinary and romantic in all the long list of his adventures and one which would never have been dreamed of by a man less recklessly daring. At that time the most talked about and the wealthiest of New York's billionaires was the late William Grayman. He had accumulated a stupendous fortune by means of a "corner in banks."

I was a young lieutenant in charge of a government aero engaged in the revenue service, and the one thing outside my regular occupation that especially interested me was the progress of invention growing out of the old wireless telegraph.

Mr. Grayman, who had long been a widower, had an only child, Miss Helen Grayman, who was one of the most beautiful girls in the richest social circle of New York and was doted on by her father. She was about eighteen years of age, and it was the common report that several European counts and dukes and one prince sought her hand. But it was also averred that she had refused them all.

This made Miss Grayman popular with thousands who had never met her. I recall that my interest in Miss Grayman was first pleasantly awakened by seeing her portrait in a Sunday journal over the title of "An American Girl Who Is True to America."

One evening late in June, 1930, Miss Grayman had retired to her room on the third story of her father's splendid mansion in Fifth avenue and was about to begin her toilet for the night with the aid of her maid, Susan Jackson, when a peculiar noise at one of the windows facing Central park attracted their attention. Miss Grayman had a favorite cat, which sometimes signified its desire to enter her room by tapping on the door, and she directed Susan to open the lattice. The girl threw the window wide open, expecting, like her mistress, to see the cat leap in.

But instead of the cat a man stepped inside. He was instantly followed by a companion. Before the affrighted girls could utter the scream that was upon their lips they were seized and gagged, though with all possible gentleness, and then were swiftly carried out of the window and upon the deck of an aero which floated against the wall of the house. The leader darted back into the room, saying, "I'll put out the light."

He was gone only a minute. As soon as he emerged, leaving the room in darkness, the aero glided out over the trees of the park. The hour was not very late; but, although the avenue and the park in places were brilliantly lighted, no passerby seems to have noticed the presence of the aero.

Neither of the men who had entered the room wore a mask or made any attempt at personal concealment. In fact, the leader immediately impressed Miss Grayman with his remarkably handsome and refined face, as well as his inextinguishable politeness and gentility. In a few minutes the aero had risen to a considerable elevation, revealing the fiery lines of the streets below, and then it flitted out into the darkness over the Hudson. The handkerchiefs that had been bound over the captives' mouths were now removed, and they were led into a beautiful little cabin, brilliantly illuminated with colored electric lights, near the center of the deck.

Both sank into chairs, and Captain Payton—for of course it was he—took a seat opposite to them. He smiled in a so friendly and reassuring a manner that it was impossible for Miss Grayman to be afraid of him. The idea of a criminal attempt upon her liberty never entered her thoughts. She imagined that it was a huge practical joke perpetrated by some of her intimate friends, and she tried to think who among them would be most likely to venture upon such an exploit.

"I must beg a thousand pardons for carrying you off in this way, Miss Grayman," Payton said, "and I wish at once to offer my absolute assurance that no possible harm to you is intended. I have been in a manner compelled to act as I have done for reasons which you will shortly understand. Since I know your charitable disposition and your sympathy with the unfortunate, I feel sure that I can count upon your heartfelt support in an enterprise which has been undertaken in order to afford a great and a fully determined gratification to certain persons who have not been treated by the world with even handed justice. For the carrying-out of this enterprise your co-operation and presence have been thought essential."

This extraordinary speech was delivered in a manner as confiding and gracious and with a smile so winning that Miss Grayman was far from detecting the irony that lurked in it. She now became more than ever convinced that this was really a ruse of some of her friends to engage her in a romantic adventure, although she could not imagine why they should have chosen so singular a method of enlisting her. But it had the charm of great novelty, and youth, inexperience and high spirits united to give her a delightful thrill of undefined interest in the escapade. She felt quite at her ease and was prepared to enjoy some most pleasant surprises. She answered, therefore, with no little gaiety of manner:

"Mr. — of course I do not know your name, you know?"

"Brown," Payton replied promptly and with an even more engaging smile than that which had before illumined his countenance. "Commodore Frederick Brown of the Washington Aero Yacht club."

It was a lucky hit, though made entirely at random. It happened that Miss Grayman had many close friends in Washington, and now she could no longer entertain the least doubt of the correctness of her original surmise. This Commodore Brown evidently belonged to the best circle of society at the capital and had been selected by her friends to act as intermediary in their plot. The extravagance of the notion of having her carried off without the least warning or preparation at such an hour and by a stranger did not occur to her excited imagination. It seemed all as delightful as a fairy tale, and she tingled with the desire to witness the denouement, which could not fail to be most entertaining. With girlish eagerness she asked, with a knowing look:

"Where have they told you to take me?"

Payton was the shrewdest of the shrewd. He saw in a second the trend of Miss Grayman's thoughts and the advantage which it would give him. So, assuming an appearance of some confusion at being so quickly found out, he answered:

"Oh, you know I mustn't tell you that. It would spoil all the fun. You'll understand everything when we get there."

And then he broke out with a laugh so joyous, hearty and insinuating that the girl laughed with him, while Susan stretched her mouth in a broad grin over the unexpected hilarity.

"We've got quite a run before us," Payton resumed in a more serious manner. "And I think, if you will permit me, that I have a little cabin which, I hope, that you will find comfortable, and, with your permission, I will show you to it."

He led the way, courteously opened a door amidships, touched a knob to turn on the electric light within the apartment and as soon as the girls had entered bowed low with formal politeness, saying as he turned on his heel:

"I wish you pleasant dreams. Good night!"

The little room in which they found themselves might have been regarded as elegant anywhere. It was lavishly furnished, but with good taste, and contained two small beds.

"Good Lord, Miss Helen!" Susan exclaimed as soon as they were alone. "What will your father say?"

The remark struck to Miss Grayman's heart. It was the first time she had thought of her father and of his distress when he should discover her absence. But her eager mind was full of resources.

"No doubt papa knows all about it," she replied. "It is my friends who are doing this, you know, and of course they must have taken him secretly into their confidence; otherwise they never would have ventured so far. And what a handsome man Commodore Brown is, and so agreeable!"

It required no more than the suggestion of her fancy to persuade the romantic girl that her father was aware of the ruse and had given his consent to it. This thought increased her confidence so much that, with the utmost self-possession, she prepared to retire and was soon sleeping peacefully as if she had been in her own chamber, the imperceptible motion of the aero being totally free from the disturbing effects of the rolling and pitching of a marine craft.

But Susan, with less peace of mind, lay awake thinking and wondering for hours.

ADMITS FORMING SUGAR TRUST

Parsons Attacks Attitude of Political Parties.

THINKS JAIL PERIL AVERTED

Declares Oil and Tobacco Decisions Make It Impossible to Enforce the Criminal Clause of Sherman Act.

New York, July 21.—John E. Parsons, former counsel for the American Sugar Refining company, told the special congressional committee investigating the so-called trust his version of the formation of the sugar combine. He said at first that he was willing to share all the blame, "if there is any."

"I am willing to take the blame for originating the idea of consolidating the sugar interests into the big company in 1887," said Mr. Parsons. Mr. Parsons went further and said that this was the first big combination, even preceding the Standard Oil, and Representative Madison, of Kansas, remarked: "Ah, here is the real father of the trusts."

"Who suggested to you the idea of bringing these independent companies together in 1887 into the sugar refining company?" "Well, I think it was in all their minds. I'm the man though, who deserves the credit or the blame for actually forming that company which under reorganization because of the Sherman anti-trust law, became the present American Sugar Refining company. I thoroughly believe in the combination of capital, of labor and any other interest for the benefit of those interested, when it is legal."

"There were twenty-three refineries in the United States at the time that you welded seventeen of them into the Sugar Refining company of 1887," said Mr. Parsons. "Can you tell me what efforts were made to get in the other refineries?" "The only man who can tell you is now dead. That is John E. Searles."

"How long did the refineries company last?" "The change in its affairs began when a political party brought suit to disorganize the North River Refining company," said Mr. Parsons.

"What party?" cried most of the congressmen. "We call it Tammany Hall." Then all of them wanted to know why.

"Well that was about the opening shot of a political party against the trusts and both parties have kept it up ever since. That's why I am not a good party man now."

The court, Mr. Parsons said, dissolved the North River company because it was a corporation and had no right to join a partnership, which was the form of the sugar refineries company. Mr. Parsons explained how John E. Searles had paid $500,000 for the $550,000 North River property and dismantled the refinery. Then Searles, after killing the North River company's actual self, entered it as a partner in the sugar refineries company.

This the court of appeals declared to be illegal, thus killing a body that had already committed suicide. "So you see," continued Mr. Parsons, "there is even a lot of humbug in our own highest court."

Mr. Parsons, in a discussion with the committee, declared that the decision of the United States supreme court in the Standard Oil and tobacco trust cases would make it impossible to enforce the criminal clause of the Sherman act.

"Was there not," he was asked, "a great deal of water in the first $50,000,000 stock of the American Sugar Refining company?" "If the refineries obtaining the trust certificates were worth what they were paid then there was no water. If you ask me if the actual properties of the new company could have been sold in the open market for $50,000,000 I will tell you no. But to the new company they were worth what was paid for them as a matter of policy and business."

Mr. Parsons then went into a long dissertation on the combinations of capital, which he strongly favored, condemning the federal government for its interference with such combinations, and declaring that Great Britain was prosperous because of its non-restraint of trade. He was also against the Sherman anti-trust law and was only lukewarm in approval of the interstate commerce law.

"I thoroughly approve of the recent Standard Oil and tobacco trust cases where the supreme court read 'reasonable' into the law," said Mr. Parsons. "Otherwise there would have been the worst panic this country ever knew."

3 MASKED BANDITS ROB EXPRESS TRAIN

Go Through Passengers and Secure $500.

Grand Forks, N. D., July 21.—Train No. 2, the eastbound North Coast Limited, the crack train on the Northern Pacific railroad, was held up by three masked robbers near Buffalo, N. D.

The robbers obtained about $500 in cash by going through the passengers. They shot S. P. Olson, the engineer, of Fargo, twice in order to make him stop the train, and made a successful escape in an automobile which they had in waiting near the scene of the robbery.

When the train stopped at the high bridge at Valley City the three men boarded it and went into the day coach. Heavily armed and shooting recklessly in order to intimidate the passengers, they first lined the train crew up at one end of the car. Then they proceeded to search the passengers in the observation car and last two sleepers one by one. In all they obtained about $500 from this part of their robbery.

After searching the occupants of the berths they climbed out of the diner, over the baggage and express car, to the engine, reaching that part of the train when near Buffalo. They ordered Olson, the engineer, to stop the train so they could get off. When he refused to comply with their wishes two shots were fired directly at him, one glancing off his watch and the other striking him on a rib, injuring him slightly.

After being wounded and seeing that the men were desperate, Olson stopped the train. The three men, who all were masked with polka dot handkerchiefs, jumped quickly from the train and ran into the darkness.

WALL STREET.

The Human Side of New York's Great Financial Quarter.

To the man who looks from without upon Wall Street it seems a place of deep and dangerous mystery, a region of dens and caves and labyrinths full of perils which threaten loss and perhaps ruin to him who enters there. And such in too many instances it has proved to be. But nevertheless there is a decided human side to Wall Street. It is perhaps the most "two faced" street in the world. Here men who occupy the highest pinnacle of financial success and who are powerful kings, in fact, daily brush elbows with office boys and bank messengers, "get-rich-quick" highwaymen, silly and pretty girl stenographers, curb brokers and curb merchants and sharp tongued and red hot witted "newsies"—with all the motley tide that flows into "the street" each morning and ebbs back again at night.

Wall street may be said to be the most democratic street in the world, for all its vast wealth. There is no street where a crowd will gather more quickly than there, even upon the smallest pretext. It may be a street fester selling some newfangled toy or a man gliding the ball on a flagpole 500 feet up in the air. A suffragette making a speech would transfer practically the entire population from a dozen skyscrapers to the "standing room only" in her immediate vicinity. But unless one hurries he will not get a good view of the fair creature, for soon she is lost from view in tangles of ticker tape tossed in reels from the nearby office windows, a favorite sport among the brokerage house clerks.

This sort of thing usually takes place during the noon hour, and at that time all work is suspended at the first sound of a band in the distance. Everybody flies to the curb. Business can wait in this busiest of streets for most anything before 2 o'clock, when the chimes of Trinity sound the afternoon session and "the street" settles down to its serious business of making financial history.

Such is the everyday "outside" little crooked street, "with the river at one end and a cemetery at the other," which has sent scores upon scores to one or the other—the street with a destiny.—Strand Magazine.

Ghosts Without Heads.

Speaking of ghosts, the London Chronicle says that "headless coaches" are fairly numerous in England. The most famous is the one that drives once a year, on the anniversary of Anne Boleyn's execution, up the avenue at Blickling, her Norfolk home. The coachman and the four horses have not a head between them, and Anne's own is not upon her shoulders, but she holds it in her lap as she sits in the coach all in white. At the ball door the whole apparition vanishes. Anne's father, Sir Thomas, also rides in a coach drawn by headless horses once a year, and his ride is much more exciting than his daughter's. He has to cross forty county bridges during the night and a company of yelling demons pursues the coach to keep the horses going. But how do the horse hear the noise if they have no ears?

Circumstances Alter Cases.

When Israel Zangwill was an obscure youth teaching in a Jewish school in London he sent a short poem to a leading American monthly. It came back by an early post. He kept it, and after he had achieved fame as a writer he sent the same poem to the same magazine. This time he received a cable from the editor offering to buy the "world rights" for a large sum. The poem was the same, word for word.

Different.

"Why, a year ago you told me this place was easily worth $15,000. Now you estimate its value at less than $10,000."

A GREWSOME REVENGE

By PETER C. DOHONOF

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

In Russia there is a custom among the rural classes in certain regions which is very curious. Instead of a man asking a girl to marry him, a girl who wishes a man for a husband goes to his house and asks him to marry her. If he declines and turns her out her relatives will be revenged upon him, so she may stay on, if she likes, till he succumbs or concludes to take a thrashing from her big brother.

Peter Hazlevich while living in a region where it was customary for the man to propose met a young girl at a dance and afterward courted her. She listened to his lovemaking, expecting every day that he would propose to her. But Peter delayed and, finally meeting another girl he liked better, ceased his attentions to the first and bestowed them on the second.

Five years later Peter was living, a single man, among those people whose marriages were arranged by the woman's making the first advance. He had failed to win the second girl he had renewed to the first. Indeed, the first girl, Katherine Dronsky, gave every evidence that if he came courting her again he would catch a tartar.

One day Katherine, while attempting to kindle a fire by pouring kerosene oil on it, caused an explosion. She was badly burned, and on recovering her face was a mass of scars.

One day Peter was at work on his farm in his new home when he saw a woman go into his house. She being veiled, he could not see her face. At once he suspected that one of his neighbors was intending to make him a proposition of marriage. This disconcerted him, for he had not seen any woman in his neighborhood whom he would like to marry except one, whom he did not believe wanted him. But the thought that it might be she filled him with pleasure. At any rate, anxious to know who had favored him, he threw down his implements and went to the house.

There, standing in his living room, was Katherine Dronsky, the girl he had jilted.

This is what she said: "Peter, hearing that you had come to this country, never having been able to conquer my love for you, I concluded to come too. We—my mother, my brothers and myself—have bought a farm near yours, and I, hearing of the custom of this country by which the girl instead of the man proposes marriage, have come to ask you to be my husband."

Peter quailed before the look she gave him—a look of hate, revenge, triumph. It froze the very marrow in his bones. He stood looking upon the horrible face confronting him like one paralyzed by a specter. He knew Katherine's brothers and that they had been bitter against him for his desertion of their sister and had she would have punished him. Now, doubtless, they were ready to support her in this revenge she had evidently set her heart upon.

"You don't seem pleased to see me, Peter," the woman said scornfully. "I'm not so beautiful as I was when you courted me, but I have the same heart. At any rate, if there is any change of heart you have caused it, so yours is the fault. They tell me here that when a girl goes to a man's house to propose marriage she remains there if she likes till he accepts her. I have come here to stay."

She took off her wraps and, going to the fire, sat down before it. Peter stood for a while wondering if it would do any good to throw himself on her mercy. But he decided otherwise. He went back to his work.

He had one hope—that since there was no one but himself in her house, no mother, no sister, perhaps Katherine would consider it improper to stay there with him, and she surely could not force him to make it proper by marrying her. There was an out-house on the premises used for the storage of farm implements, and during the afternoon he saw Katherine carrying bedding and other furniture there. So this hope died in his breast. Instead it gave him a slight comfort. He would be free from her during the night.

And so the two entered upon a new life, the one of endurance, the other of revenge. Peter never spoke to her, and after her proposal she never spoke to him. She cooked her own food in the buthouse, and Peter cooked his in the farmhouse. Peter grew lean and haggard, and his eye after a time had the look of one whose mind is on the point of giving way. He worked on his farm from early morning till as late as he could see, never going into his house except for his meals. Katherine kept in her own quarters except for about an hour after Peter quit work, which she spent in the farmhouse with him.

One night the neighbors saw a lurid glare in the direction of Peter's house and, going there, found it on fire. Katherine rushed out of her quarters and, seeing the fire, called on Peter to come out. He came to a window, and she begged piteously for forgiveness. As soon as he saw her he disappeared and was seen no more. Katherine ran to the building and tried to enter, but those present held her. Then the roof fell in, and all knew that Peter Hazlevich had perished.

Katherine was taken away from that region and was never again heard of in those parts.

IN THE REALM OF FASHION

Modish Bathing Suit.

Some of the very smartest bathing suits are of black taffeta, the effective contrast of sapphire blue or emerald green being sometimes provided by yoke or collar. The new bullet buttons of oxidized silver or gold are also in evidence on many decorative and durable toilets for the sea. These to be chic should be completed by a turban headdress in that same blue or green and a pair of the black satin boots which are the novelty of the season.

Still another pretty way of trimming these black silk suits is to border the neck of the kimono bodice with a wide band of, say, pale blue foulard spotted or striped with white and to further finish off the tunic with groups of little gold buttons.

The bathing suit pictured here is of taffeta with a silk jersey over which falls a collar of plain and striped silk.

FICHUS OF OLD LACE AND FLOWER HATS

With Sprigged Gowns They Are Quaint and Picturesque.

Fichus and flower hats are very popular with the summer girl. Whether the flower hat is a result of the filmy fichu, or vice versa, one is the complement of the other, and neither could be worn with its present effectiveness without the other.

One clever girl resurrected an organdie dress long ago relegated to the back closet. The fabric showed a shadow design of pink roses on a white background, the shadow leaves of green giving just the proper contrast.

She cut out the high necked yoke and draped about the shoulders a drape of soft white material, thin and graceful as chiffon. The edge was finished with a fluted frill of the material and caught together in front with an old fashioned pin.

With it she wore a wide leghorn hat wreathed with pink roses so natural looking one wanted to breathe their fragrance. A wide streamer of black velvet ribbon was caught underneath the chin in picturesque fashion.

Regarding the flower hat, the imagination may run riot in the matter of trimmings. One of the favorite bouquets for distributing over the wide brim is sweet peas in all their variegated shades.

Another flower lending itself gracefully to hat adornment is wistaria. One lingerie hat of unusual daintiness was of white point d'esprit, the entire brim covered with pale pink and lavender wistaria.

Lilies in either a combination of purple and white or the colors used alone are effective. Striking indeed was a broad soft brimmed black chip with a loose wreath of American Beauty roses and field daisies. White chip with garlands of white roses is becoming to the girl who wears a great many fine lingerie frocks.

Hair Ornaments.

Black velvet bands studded with gold or jeweled buckles are used to adorn the classic style of coiffure, while the more coquettish girl uses them fluted with a knot on each end, a spray of silver argent on one side or a bunch of drooping silk rose buds.

Satin ribbon is used as a twist, soft folds, flat bands, plain, embroidered, beaded, lace applied; so is gilt, with a bow, fan or knot just back of the left ear.

Too Much For Him.

Voltaire could not speak much English. The reason why he refused to study the language in this: It was drilled into him that "plague" was pronounced "plag," which he thought very pretty and acceptable. But right on top of it he was introduced to "ague," which his teacher said must be called "ague." Finding it impossible to reconcile the difference, he went off into a philosophical tantrum and dropped the study.

EDDY SON CLAIMS UNDUE INFLUENCE

Asserts Church Directors Coerced Feeble Testatrix.

Concord, N. H., July 21.—"pernicious," "hostile to organized society" and "forbidden and made void by public policy and the laws of the land," are some of the terms applied to the practices of the leaders of the Christian Science church in a lengthy set of amendments filed with the clerk of the Merrimack county superior court by counsel for George W. Glover, of Lead, S. D., to Glover's bill seeking to have the residuary clause of the will of his mother, Mrs. Mary Baker G. Eddy, declared void.

This residuary clause bequeaths the residue of the estate, estimated at about $2,000,000, to the First Church of Christ, Scientist, of Boston, and Glover seeks to obtain this residue for himself and Dr. E. J. Foster Eddy, of Waterbury, Vermont. Mrs. Eddy's adopted son. The bill is directed against Henry M. Baker, executor of the Eddy estate, and officers of the Christian Science church.

The amendments conclude: "The plaintiff now, therefore, avers that the residuary bequest of substantially all Mrs. Eddy's property to the First Church of Christ, Scientist, Boston, Mass., was procured by the five directors of said church by concealment from her of the unlawfulness of the bequest and by undue influence over a feeble and deluded testatrix, and that said bequest is void."
